Bethany Hagberg

Kahoot Game:
https://create.kahoot.it/share/hagberg-sailing-school/b1017636-d77c-4bdd-92f1-5060bb8db97d

Since I am not teaching, I decided to create a game for my children, ages 13 and 15. We like to go sailing as a family, but my kids do not always understand the sailing terms we throw out at them. I wanted to give them a game where they could compete. I did think of other games to use like Fling, the Teacher, Jeopardy, Who Wants to Be a Millionaire, etc. I wanted something that I could add photos to and make more personal. I liked using Kahoot because it will be a learning lesson for them too.

My kids played the Kahoot Game this morning before heading off to school. My son immediately saw the title and told his sister that he was going to demolish her. However, as the questions came, my daughter, who was cool, calm, and collected, kept getting the answers right. My son was trying to go so fast, and he kept hitting the wrong buttons. My daughter won with only one wrong answer. My son didn't lose by much, but it did impact his attitude for the next five minutes before going out to the bus. It was kind of amazing how confident he was at the beginning and how devastated he was at the end. I think this kind of game can be good, but the competition between classmates can get intense and different games might be necessary.